Henry Holt - book publisher of New York, says:- "The knowledge of the future is to be stored in vast sets of bound periodicals."

Popular literature is not only a guage of popular morality, but animportant element in popular education.

It is was the contemplation of the enormous multiplicity of what Frederic Harrison has called the poisonous inhilations of mere literary garbage and bad men's worse thoughts that drove hom to exclaim that he could almost reckon the printing-press as amongst the scourges of mankind.

W.P.Atkinson says:- "Boys and girls are kept, year in and year out, wielding knife and fork of grammar and spelling and cyphering over dishes empy of all nutriment, diligently dipping spoons into bowls where the intellectual draught that should have quenched their thirst has heon forgotten. what wonder that, to supply the demands of such readers, twaddle-mills are set up and cannot grind their grist of chaff fast enough to supply the market.
